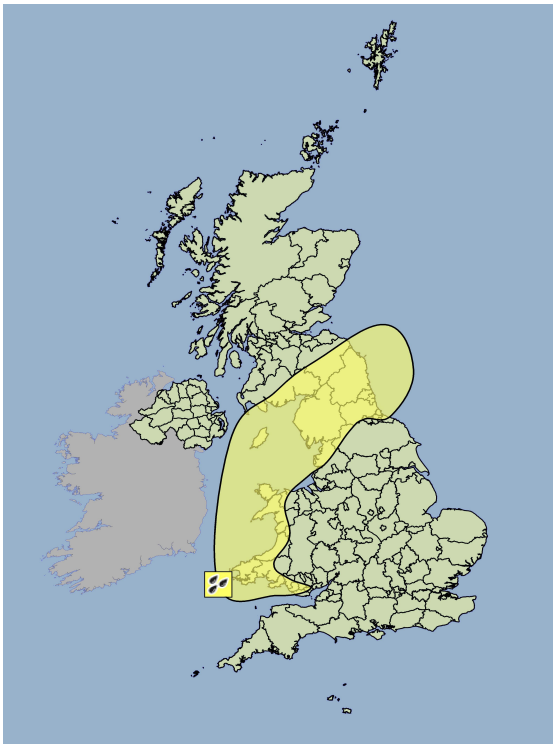
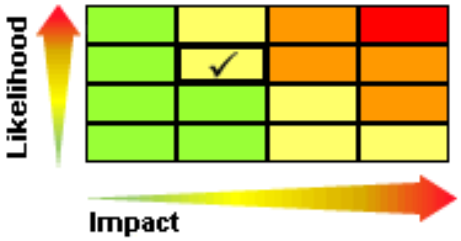
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An active trough will run quickly northeast on Saturday afternoon, clearing from southern Scotland and Northumberland later in the evening.

The main hazard will be heavy rainfall, this falling on saturated ground, which is likely to lead to some surface water flooding in places. Around 20 mm may fall in 3 or 4 hours towards the north of the warning area. Additionally, winds may gust above 50 mph, perhaps even nearer to 60 mph in a few exposed areas, leading to a lot of spray. Hail may be a further hazard on roads.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 15:00 on Sat, 21st Dec 2013 until 20:00 on Sat, 21st Dec 2013

A band of heavy rain and squally winds will affect many northern and western areas of England, and much of Wales, through Saturday afternoon and evening.

The public should be aware that travel conditions will become locally difficult for a time.
